CAMDEN WORKS

Reimagining Workforce Development in Camden
After 50 years of social and economic isolation, Camden is growing. Camden is the safest it has been in decades, K-12 education has improved in meaningful ways, over a thousand new housing units are being rehabilitated or built in neighborhoods and new park and road infrastructure projects are being constructed. Key to sustaining this growth is the City’s ability to create employment opportunities for residents through a streamlined employment training and placement program called Camden Works.

Camden Works is a private initiative led by Managing Partners including the New Jersey National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Latin American Economic Development Association, Cooper’s Ferry Partnership, Center for Family Services, Camden County Workforce Development Board and Hopeworks.

Camden Works will be supported by Funding Partners, including Co-Chair George E, Norcross, III, Chairman, Cooper University Hospital, MD Anderson Cancer at Cooper and Co-Chair Susan Story, President and CEO of American Water Works, Inc. along with philanthropic and corporate partners such as United Way of Greater Philadelphia & Southern New Jersey, Wells Fargo, American Water, Conner Strong & Buckelew, The Michaels Organization, and NFI to name a few initial donors. In addition, Camden Works will be guided by a group of Advisory Partners, including government leaders, religious leaders and residents of Camden.

First, Camden has always had a strong “Eds and Meds” sector, which in recent years has become a substantial contributor to improving the City’s economic climate. Premier institutions like MD Anderson at Cooper, Cooper University Health Care, Virtua Our Lady of Lourdes Hospital, Coriell Institute for Medical Research, Cooper Medical School of Rowan University, Rutgers University - Camden, Camden County College and our K-12 schools have continued their capital investment to expand and reinforce Camden’s emerging role as a research, health care and education hub. This growing sector already accounts for forty-percent of the jobs in the City and is likely to grow even more significantly, bringing more opportunities for Camden residents.

Second, not since the turn of the twentieth century, has Camden seen so much in-migration of businesses. The Economic Opportunity Act of 2013 has been a driving force, attracting businesses to Camden and in some cases helping those companies already here expand operations. As a direct result of the tax incentives, some 20 companies have chosen to establish or deepen their roots in Camden with more arriving over the next few years. Today, Camden is fortunate to have large companies like Campbell Soup Company, Subaru, American Water, and EMR. Smaller companies like Contemporary Graphics and Camden Yards Steel also call the City home. These companies are becoming meaningful contributors by working in earnest to offer Camden residents employment opportunities.

Thousands of jobs have come to Camden and at least 1260 residents are working in the facilities that have received tax credits. The recent arrival of these companies underscores the fact that the process of engaging residents for employment is just beginning. The collective impact of all the investments in the city has and is helping lower Camden’s unemployment rate.

Camden’s unemployment rate fell to 6.8% during the summer of 2019, a 30-year low. The importance of Camden’s current unemployment rate cannot be understated. As recently as 2012, Camden had the dubious distinction of being the poorest city in America. In that year, the annual average unemployment rate was 17.7%. Even during periods of economic growth in the nation and New Jersey, finding a stable economic footing always seemed to elude Camden and its residents. Equally important, during national and regional downcycles, Camden experienced an exacerbated and arguably disproportionate negative impact. Viewed holistically, these data points show just how far Camden has progressed from the depths of economic isolation.

To ensure Camden continues its path to progress, it is vital that we develop a comprehensive training and employment placement program. While the current efforts to train and place people are well intended, a clear and present opportunity exists to integrate a fragmented system into a more effective one. The goal of Camden Works is to support the employment opportunities at hand by streamlining the connection between employers and residents seeking jobs. By convening employers and helping residents overcome common barriers to employment, we will continue to build pathways for residents to participate in the City’s economic growth.

Camden Works is designed to leverage resources from various entities to provide training, education, and placement but most importantly wrap around social services. We will focus on, but not be limited to, four categories of individuals: (1) city high school graduates, who are ready for training and employment; (2) returning citizens or previously incarcerated; (3) recent local college graduates; and (4) displaced homemakers.

We propose the following strategies:

1. Facilitate the connection between local employment opportunities and local workforce development programs;

2. Partner with local workforce development programs that prepare the local talent pool of job-seekers; and

3. Monitor job retention of positions filled through Camden Works.

Camden Works is proposed as a four-year pilot and will focus on employment targets considering the absorption capacity of the companies and the need to carefully train, place and follow Camden residents to reach their maximum potential.
In Camden there is a need to streamline the connection between employers and residents seeking job opportunities. The focus needs to be on building a pathway for residents to participate in the City’s economic growth. The objective is to convene employers and assist residents to overcome common barriers in a unified system for verifiable, meaningful and achievable success.

The continuum of recruitment, training and education is complex. It becomes more complicated when candidates require intense wraparound case management and social services. In Camden, the ability of an individual to succeed is not just dependent on training, education, and placement but requires robust social support which will be at the center of our initiative.

Based on available data, we will focus on four categories of audiences which will include: (1) high school graduates, who are ready for training and employment; (2) returning citizens or previously incarcerated; (3) recent local college graduates; and (4) displaced homemakers.

We propose the following strategies:

1. Facilitate the connection between local employment opportunities and local workforce development programs;

2. Partner with local workforce development programs that prepare the local talent pool of job-seekers; and

3. Monitor job retention of positions filled through Camden Works.

In Camden, employee recruitment and placement are not centrally organized. Companies are more likely to seek out multiple entities for employee referrals, with no process to match the candidates with the skills required for the positions. Similarly, non-profits that are training Camden residents have no assurance that people in their candidate pool will get an opportunity to be employed, which leads to frustration among residents. Finally, residents do not have a structured mechanism, other than occasional job fairs, to hear about and apply for employment. We propose to serve as a central system and become a supplier of candidates to companies. In order to accomplish this, we will:
1. Recruit residents using a comprehensive community engagement approach that assesses job-seekers employment readiness through individualized case management;

2. Connect job-seekers to existing job training resources at non-profit partners as needed to overcome common barriers of success;

3. Provide a cogent mechanism for non-profits to train candidates to become part of the employment pipeline;

4. Become an active and primary interface with companies to determine employment needs and qualifications;

5. Match and facilitate the connection between vetted candidates and companies;

6. Provide social wraparound services initially and post-placement for one year;

7. Develop recommendations that can be implemented in companies to improve local, inclusive hiring practices; and

8. Monitor job retention of positions filled through Camden Works.

Case Management

Center for Family Services (CFS) will be primarily responsible for case management. CFS will offer resources and expertise in effectively blending workforce development and human services assets to streamline resources and improve service delivery to participants and employers through the following:

1. Creating a system to recruit, assess and place trained and qualified candidates who meet employer’s hiring criteria; and

2. Layer in Individual Employment Plans (IEPs), skill building, training, certification, support groups, and human/social services to overcome existing and potential barriers to sustained success.

A Case Manager will be hired and managed by CFS and leverage its expertise in the Pathways to Success cadre of workforce development services. The Case Manager will:
1. Support the intake and Individual Employment Plan (IEP) development and management for participants recruited through various partners located in Camden City;

2. Be trained in topics that may include motivational interviewing, appreciative inquiry, trauma-informed care, Mental Health First Aid, etc. to reference and apply to each individual case and develop best practices; and

3. Work collaboratively with stakeholders to make cross-agency referrals and serve as an internal support system for resources and linkages for participants in preparation for employment.

Individuals will be engaged in identifying their own goals and defining success, work one-on-one with the Case Manager to document the design of that pathway in an IEP, and develop ways to measure, recognize and reward achievements. The Case Manager will support the assessments of basic adult skills, education and interests through modules such as CASAS and Conover.

Wraparound Support
Warm connections to supportive resources and service referrals will be made to assist participants in overcoming personal barriers to successful employment, including child care, transportation, driving record expungement, driver’s license procurement/restoration, documentation retrieval and consolidation (i.e. social security cards, birth certificates, and other documentation required to begin formal work experience), and more to create a personalized pathway to success. In addition, individuals will have an opportunity to engage in weekly in-person one-on-one meetings with the Case Manager who will support them in identifying their goals and defining success, document the design of that pathway in an IEP, and develop ways to measure, recognize and reward achievements.

Trauma Informed Practices
Policies implementing trauma informed practices are reflected throughout all of CFS’ programming and are governed by evidenced-based and promising approaches and informed by initiatives such as Safe-Child Standards and the Six Core Strategies. During the agency’s orientation process, all staff are trained in the Nurtured Heart Approach, an essential set of strategies for shifting negative behavior and inspiring thriving relationships with children and adults. The program staff apply this training and approach in their daily interactions which indicates their recognition and validation of the challenges faced by participants and provides a tool for effective engagement and trust building. At CFS, programming and practices are supported by a strengths-based framework grounded in an understanding of and responsiveness to the unique impact of trauma for our participants and an emphasis on the physical, psychological and emotional safety for both providers and survivors, and, ultimately, creating opportunities for survivors to rebuild a sense of control and empowerment in the process.

Deliverables and Outcomes

We understand that it took many decades for Camden to decline and likewise it will take some time for the city to reach its maximum potential. Understanding that this is a process that requires extraordinary effort and time, we will focus our efforts to make progress on the following long-term outcomes. Using a logic model, we have identified the following long-term goals:

1. 40% of employees of Camden companies, anchor institutions, and small businesses are Camden residents;

2. The unemployment rate in Camden decreases;

3. The poverty rate in Camden decreases;

4. Awareness of job opportunities increases among Camden residents;

5. A streamlined process for recruitment of residents is in place;

6. Camden residents are connected to full-time positions with upward mobility; and

7. Camden residents are employed in jobs that earn sustainable wages that increase each year.

Monitor and Quality

We will have several monitoring opportunities to assess progress on initial plan and viability of accomplishing outputs. This feedback system will allow us, if necessary, to modify direction in order to achieve the outcomes noted in the logic model.

We will facilitate regular communication with Advisory Board members and stakeholders such as workforce development partners and local employers to present on the state of the plan and progress toward streamlining the connection between job-seekers and local employment opportunities. Advisory Board members will be able to understand the progress made toward implementing the action steps of the strategic plan. These members will be able to provide ongoing, feedback to the overall initiative, along with suggestions for corrective action, if needed.

Besides measuring certain concrete outcomes, such as changes in unemployment rate and number of residents living below the poverty line, we will measure change in knowledge, attitudes, behaviors, and beliefs of job-seekers exposed to our efforts. A simple survey will be administered to participating residents capturing baseline data on their experience in securing and retaining work. This survey can then be repeated on a yearly basis to measure changes in attitude and behavior. This kind of monitoring is particularly important because a large-scale reversal of the unemployment trend may take years.

A survey will be administered to local employers measuring their knowledge, attitudes, behaviors, and beliefs around recruiting and hiring in Camden. This survey will be given again to employers who increase their employment of Camden residents. A basic customer satisfaction survey could also be given to Camden residents hired by local employers measuring their personal goals in upward mobility, their satisfaction with their employment process and support.

To entice completion of this survey, an incentive would be provided to each participant. A potential measure of the City’s capacity to sustain system changes in workforce development can be tracked through attendance at workforce development events including community engagement sessions, educational/training programs, and specific programs associated with this initiative.

With regards to outcome measurement, we will use publicly accessible data on city-level demographics such as the unemployment and educational attainment rates to serve as a baseline. However, we plan to use data collected by workforce development partners for subsequent years and will collect data on job retention on a yearly basis in order to evaluate progress.

Some other specific measures are:

1. Number of available job opportunities in each industry on a quarterly basis;
2. Number of attendees at job fairs and community meetings;
3. Number of jobs secured before/after this initiative;
4. Number of residents completing job training before/after this initiative;
5. Utilization of program application process; and
6. Retention rate of Camden residents working at local employers.
Funding permitted, we plan to hire an evaluator to conduct a process and outcome evaluation of our efforts. Specifically, the evaluator can design and administer all evaluation instruments, such as surveys and focus groups, collect and analyze city-level public data and help determine the most effective and efficient methods for collecting measurement data, as well as synthesizing and presenting the collected data to all partners.
GOAL: To streamline connection between local job-seekers and local employment opportunities.

Strategy 1. Facilitate the connection between local employment opportunities and local workforce development programs.

Strategy 2: Partner with local workforce development programs that prepare the local talent pool of job-seekers.

Strategy 3: Monitor job retention throughout the initiative.

Conceptual models to building strong coalitions embody an iterative approach in which interdependent organizations assess community needs and resources. We have to focus on what’s important, choose effective policies/programs, act on what’s important and evaluate actions while constantly communicating, working together and learning more. In our experience, the only way to increase employment is by putting our learning into practice in the community with diverse partners, interdependent leadership, shared direction, alignment, and commitment.

Three categories of people will lead this effort: (1) Funding Partners who are and will commit resources for implementation and sustainability; (2) Managing Partners, made up of the State of New Jersey NAACP, LAEDA, Cooper’s Ferry Partnership, Hopeworks, Center for Family Services, and the Camden County Workforce Development Board; and (3) Advisory Partners, made up of residents, government leaders, faith leaders, businesses and institutions.

They connect youth to life-changing opportunities where their growing technology skills go to work for enterprising businesses within the community. Hopeworks believes that without addressing the unresolved traumatic issues in a youth’s life - especially as they manifest in habitual patterns of protection (i.e. disengagement, disconnected emotional state, anger, emotional eruptions) they will not be able to take full advantage of opportunities in their lives.

Hopeworks will serve as the technology developer and data consultant. They will develop an online portal, mobile app, and connected database to allow applicants to submit their resumes and employment qualifications to employers as a “one-stop shop”. The portal will generate an “online resume” based on applicants answers to questions about their work experience and history, ensuring that everyone who uses the portal can be considered for employment. The online portal and mobile app should be easy enough to use however, staff will serve as ‘navigators’ to help residents complete the online resume using laptops and tablets as needed. The portal will also serve as the primary interface with companies input their employment needs and qualifications.
